First section on public footpaths, it then splits into two routes:

Last section of Southern route is off Rights of Way, but on a path that is well used by local people. The route comes out at a delph where it crosses a busy public footpath (good sight lines).

Western route continues down on a public footpath but where it reaches the busy footpath coming from Hell Hole Rocks, the route crosses over into the trees, not on a right of Way.

This is quite a well-used path by local people walking down into Hebden Bridge.

The problems

There are several blind corners caused by vegetation that are quite easy to deal with.

One section of the path is very narrow with encroaching vegetation that would make it difficult for a pedestrian to step aside.

CROWS will deal with both these issues
